

I'm a new user of XM and didn't think it was going to be worth purchasing when the three month free trial ran out. However the ability to use it from coast to coast while traveling and the variety it offers are significant and welcome. FM radio stations have their purpose but the NAB has no right to attack XM simply because they've offered a service which users pay for that is better than FM. If someone doesn't want to pay for their radio they can listen to FM stations, but if someones want to get a huge assortment of music as well as news and weather there is no reason they shouldn't be able to pay for an alternative to FM radio.
